Tuscany

Tuscany is arguably one of the most important wine-producing regions in Italy, where it is known locally as Toscana. A full 68% of the region is classified as 'hilly' and hillside vineyards produce the overwhelming majority of the highest quality wines. Sangiovese, the region's signature grape varie... Sangiovese

Sangiovese is Italy's most widely planted red grape variety, particularly common in Central Italy and most notably, principally responsible for the fine red wines of Tuscany. It is the base of the blend for Chianti, Vino Nobile di Montepulciano and most Supertuscans. It produces high quality wines w... Read More

TASTING NOTES

Famiglia Losi Millennium Gran Selezione 2013. Grown from the oldest clones on the family's prime southwest facing slopes at 300-350m, this red is an intense ruby red wine featuring long persistent aromas of plum and balsamic hints. In the mouth it is dry, warm and charming with ripe, soft and velvety tannins.
