REGION

Tuscany

Tuscany is arguably one of the most important wine-producing regions in Italy, where it is known locally as Toscana. A full 68% of the region is classified as 'hilly' and hillside vineyards produce the overwhelming majority of the highest quality wines. Sangiovese, the region's signature grape varie... GRAPE

Sangiovese

Sangiovese is Italy's most widely planted red grape variety, particularly common in Central Italy and most notably, principally responsible for the fine red wines of Tuscany. It is the base of the blend for Chianti, Vino Nobile di Montepulciano and most Supertuscans. It produces high quality wines w... Read More

TASTING NOTES

The Losi are a small ancient family of Chianti winemakers that have produced Chianti Classico since 1870. The grapes are harvested from their estate which lies in the most Southernmost hills of Chianti, receiving excellent sun exposure. Jancis Robinson described these tannins as "like a Persian carpet", exulting the warm, inviting spiciness and flavours of red plum, praline and cherries.
